"Incomparable Soldiers."

At the conferring by Gen. French of the M.C. upon the mayor and town of Ypres, rich tribute was paid Canadians, Englishmen, and Australians by the intrepid King of Belgium. He said:

"We are here on sacred ground. One hundred and fifty thousand Englishmen, Australians and Canadians have among the bravest, sleep their last sleep. Near these ruins they fell for the cause of the independence of nations, and they lie on this line where they broke the assaults of the power who tried to make brutal force overrule right. The British soldier has proved here the stubborn courage, the quiet spirit of sacrifice, the faith in his race and cause, which have made the greatness of England and created one of the most powerful empires that ever existed."

Removing his cap, King Albert added: "I pay a tribute of deep admiration to the memory of those heroic warriors. I extend to them the homage of respect and gratitude of the Belgian nation. We shall always consider it a sacred duty to care piously for the graves of those incomparable soldiers, those free citizens who died to insure the reign of freedom."

Reminded.

The Premier of South Africa, Gen. Smuts, is a hard worker and thoroughly unaffected. Consequently, says Pall-Mall, he hates gush. "Let me see," he said, high and mighty young officer who sat next to him at a reception in London shortly after the war, "haven't we—ah—met somewhere?" "Yes," replied the general. "Thought so," remarked the officer, adding with a bored air, "One meets so many people! Let me see, where did we meet?" "In South Africa," returned the general, quietly. "You surrendered to me during the war."

An Unkind Retort.

"I understand it is hard to get leather now," said the man making conversation at the lunch counter.

"Almost impossible," replied the boss of the ranch.

"That accounts for it. I have noticed your sandwiches have been more tender of late."

The British Post Office deals with nearly 90,000,000 telegrams each year.

The Deed Was Done.

"What were you saying, Tommy?" asked a mother of her six-year-old son, whose prayers she was hearing. "I was praying to be given a new scooter on my birthday, mummie," was the reply. "Oh, you must not pray about such frivolous things," replied the parent. "I can't help it now, mummie; it will have to be 'cause I've already said 'Amen.'"

RED ARMY IN RETREAT

But Bolshevists Claim They Are Not Defeated.

Contradictory Views Regarding the Situation In Poland — Peace Seems Probable Within a Short Time, and French Are Warning Poles Not to Press Advantage Too Far.

LONDON, Aug. 31.—A long statement was issued Sunday by M. Kameneff, head of the Russian delegation now in London, concerning the military situation on the Polish-Galician front and the peace negotiations at Minsk. Kameneff describes as "fabulous" reports that the Poles have virtually destroyed the Russian army, and asserts that the Russians are now re-grouping and preparing for a new offensive.

Kameneff says that the campaign of Gen. Wrangel, the anti-Bolshevik commander in South Russia, is "making an end. Wrangel is described to be in a critical situation and to be retreating toward the Crimea. All reports that Wrangel has captured Novorossisk and Ekaterinodar are pure inventions, says Kameneff.

The statement declares that M. Donsloff, the Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, and other Polish delegates, have gone to Brest-Litovsk for a conference with members of the Polish Government, and that this will delay the peace negotiations at least a week. Kameneff blames the Polish attack for the break in wireless communication between Minsk and Warsaw and accuses the Poles of a policy of "systematic procrastination. He explained that it was impossible during the continuance of hostilities to allow "the enemy" facilities for picking up Russian wireless despatches, and hence Polish use of the wireless was limited to five hours daily. Kameneff regrets that the Russians proposed to transfer the negotiations with the Poles to Estonia.

Gen. Maxime Weygand, after visiting Minister of War Andre Lefevre in Paris, when he was promoted to be a Grand Officer of the Legion of Honor, as a mark of recognition for his services in saving Warsaw, paid a visit later in the day to Premier Millerand, at the latter's residence at home in Versailles. In the presence of the Minister of War, Marshal Foch's Chief of Staff, who, since his return last evening, has been overwhelmed by Paris as the saviour, not only of Poland, but of entire Europe, submitted a full report of the situation on the military situation in Poland.

From a few scraps of conversation had with the hero general as he stepped off the train, it was learned that he is optimistic regarding the outlook in Poland, but he made no secret of his impression that if the Poles push their victory too far, disaster may again overtake Pilsudski's armies. Poland must show moderation and wisdom now, he must get to work, he said to inquirers. He as well as Gen. Disticker, Marshal Foch's Assistant Chief of Staff, who was among the prominent French officers assembled at the station to greet the Allied Political and Military Missions on their return, denied a rumor that the Polish offensive against the Warsaw was the result of a misunderstanding between the French leader and the commander of the Poles.

It is now intimated on the other hand that Gen. Weygand, having saved Warsaw, considered his mission accomplished, and returned to help Poland as soon as possible to avoid responsibility in case the Poles, against his advice, should overstep the limits laid down by the Allies.

From discussion overheard at French General Headquarters, however, it would appear France views with no disapproval an advance by the Poles which would ensure them strategic safety, pending the possibility of a peace treaty.

Official Home for Marshal Foch.

PARIS, Aug. 31.—The French Government is taking steps to provide for Foch an official home worthy of his position. The magnificent building on the Avenue de Grande, formerly part of the French war office, is being made ready for Marshal Foch's greatest comfort, and he will soon be in residence, real estate, some time in September.

The decision has saved the marshal from an uncomfortable predicament, since it was expected that he would be running out and his difficulty in finding one elsewhere.

Boys Stoned Farmer to Death.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 31.—Two boys, nine and eleven years old respectively, have confessed to stoning John Bowden, the aged farmer of Virden, Manitoba settlement near Gimli, who died early last morning, morning of severe injuries received August 7. Chief of the Provincial Police Force, who secured confessions, says, whose names are J. Buraski and Harry Zalinsky, are now in the custody of the Provincial Police. No charge has yet been laid. John Waleciuk, who was only an unwilling witness in the case, has been granted his liberty.

British Sailors Killed by Mob.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31.—An American arriving from Danzig reports that two British sailors were killed Saturday by street mobs, angered by the decision to unload munitions for Poland despite the Danzig Council's declaration of neutrality.

French sailors from the warships in the harbor were patrolling the streets at the Americans' departure to keep the riotous crowds in check.

A Wierd Strike.

NEW YORK, Aug. 31.—The strike of longshoremen in protest against the imprisonment of Terence MacSweney, Lord Mayor of Cork, which began last Thursday, when 2,000 workers quit, apparently has collapsed. Everything is quiet along the water-front, despite the efforts of pro-Irish women pickets. No difficulty was experienced in getting men to unload incoming British ships.

Jack Dempsey has decided to be in a critical situation and to be retreating toward the Crimea. All reports that Wrangel has captured Novorossisk and Ekaterinodar are pure inventions, says Kamenef.

The statement declares that M. Donsloff, the Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, and other Polish delegates, have gone to Brest-Litovsk for a conference with members of the Polish Government, and that this will delay the peace negotiations at least a week. Kamenef blames the Polish attack for the break in wireless communication between Minsk and Warsaw and accuses the Poles of a policy of "systematic procrastination. He explained that it was impossible during the continuance of hostilities to allow "the enemy" facilities for picking up Russian wireless despatches, and hence Polish use of the wireless was limited to five hours daily. Kamenef regrets that the Russians proposed to transfer the negotiations with the Poles to Estonia.

Gen. Maxime Weygand, after visiting Minister of War Andre Lefevre in Paris, when he was promoted to be a Grand Officer of the Legion of Honor, as a mark of recognition for his services in saving Warsaw, paid a visit later in the day to Premier Millerand, at the latter's residence at home in Versailles. In the presence of the Minister of War, Marshal Foch's Chief of Staff, who, since his return last evening, has been overwhelmed by Paris as the saviour, not only of Poland, but of entire Europe, submitted a full report of the situation on the military situation in Poland.

From a few scraps of conversation had with the hero general as he stepped off the train, it was learned that he is optimistic regarding the outlook in Poland, but he made no secret of his impression that if the Poles push their victory too far, disaster may again overtake Pilsudski's armies. Poland must show moderation and wisdom now, he must get to work, he said to inquirers. He as well as Gen. Disticker, Marshal Foch's Assistant Chief of Staff, who was among the prominent French men assembled at the station to greet the Allied Political and Military Missions on their return, denied a rumor that the Polish offensive against the Warsaw was the result of a misunderstanding between the French leader and the commander of the Poles.

It is now intimated on the other hand that Gen. Weygand, having saved Warsaw, considered his mission accomplished, and returned to help Poland as soon as possible to avoid responsibility in case the Poles, against his advice, should overstep the limits laid down by the Allies.

From discussion overheard at French General Headquarters, however, it would appear France views with no disapproval an advance by the Poles which would ensure them strategic safety, pending the possibility of a peace treaty.

RIOTING IN BELFAST

Many Killed in Bloody Street Battles.

Unionists In Ulster Are Taking Revenge Upon Sinn Feiners for Recent Outrages, and Roman Catholics Are Being Driven Out of Various Districts In North of Ireland—It Resembles Civil War.

BELFAST, Aug. 31.—An armored military car dashed through Belfast streets early Sunday morning with a Lewis machine gun crackling and made the bloodiest episode in the recent Irish riots.

Five youths were killed outright, more than fifty persons more dangerously wounded. When the military declared order restored the road was strewn with the bodies of the dead and dying and the pavements reddened with their blood.

Sinn Feiners started the battle by emerging in force from Divis Street, Sinn Fein Marbone District and penetrating the Unionist stronghold of Ewarts Row. Furniture was dragged from houses, piled in the streets and burned.

The Sinn Fein was master of the situation until hundreds of Unionist uniformed artizans got into the fight with revolvers, clubs and stones. The police looked on, helpless.

After the battle between the forces had continued for more than four hours the military commandant ordered the armored car down the street. It dashed up with a stream of bullets whistling from its Lewis gun. They pulled into a crowd at the rate of 300 a minute. The crowd broke and vanished in the area seeds, leaving the dead and wounded.

Then the victorious Unionist party sallied out on a mission of vengeance. The party wrecked the homes of Roman Catholics on Crumlin road and burned them down. It was during hall of the Independent Labor Party.

Sniping rifle fire continued all day long. Many were admitted to the hospitals suffering from gunshot wounds and from injuries inflicted by bricks and stones. Numbers are reported to be leaving the city in a state of extreme tension.

Eleven men dead is the toll of Saturday night's fighting. In addition to the six men killed during the height of the battle, two of the wounded died.

A feature of the rioting was the extent of the destruction of property by incendiarism. The fire brigade had an especially hard time during the night in fighting the flames. Their work was rendered hideous by the constant rattle of machine guns. The fire brigade drove in a strong force, and appeared to be well supplied with arms and ammunition.

The greatest bitterness was displayed during the fighting. There was a great amount of wrecking of houses and the burning of furniture, both indoors and in the streets. The yells of the mob, and the shrieks of women and children and the groans of the injured were audible throughout the city. The police force on duty was as its worst women could be seen, clad in their night attire, rushing from their burning homes to join their families from the danger zone.

Civil war has broken out in Belfast. This is no picturesque exaggeration. There is a crisis in the affairs in the south and west has so engrossed public attention that the terrible conflict raging in the northeast has escaped the notice in England.

Already there is homeless and destitute a number more than 4,000, of whom are non-Sinn Feiners, Belfast, and one-half to neighboring towns. Material damage to the value of over $3,750,000 has been done, of which at least $2,500,000 is in Belfast.

Five thousand engineers and shipwrights have been driven from the Belfast shipyards, and thousands of other workers are standing idle. These figures are being added to daily, except in case of the shipyard workers. No further increase is possible in that direction, because not a single Roman Catholic remains to be driven out. The Sinn Feiners started the trouble, and they are reaping the harvest. On Queen's Island the purge is complete, and there is peace for the moment. The entire Roman Catholic populations of Lisburn and Banbridge, about 1,000 in each case, have been successfully "evacuated" (that is the military term universally used here), by force. Two thousand men, women and children have been evacuated from Ballymenone and Larne.

Within the last four days over a hundred houses have been burned to the ground in this city, and the destruction of property in Lisburn, Bangor and Banbridge has been prodigious. Refugees are pouring into Belfast by road and rail, though Belfast has its own problems to face.

Pope Poses for Movie.

ROME, Aug. 31. — For the first time in history, a Pope has posed for the movies. Pictures were only with permission granted for the filming of scenes in the Lourdes Chapel grounds, but Pope Benedict yesterday took a leading part, posing for different groups and then for "close-ups," and expressing much amusement at the persistence of the photographers. He chose a throne, made of the pontiff and snapped him smiling into the camera.

Canada Not Hostile to Russia.

OTTAWA, Aug. 31.—There is no need for resolutions or discussion of hostile actions being taken by Canada against Russia, according to Premier Meighen. Speaking on the subject of resolutions of protest against such action which have been passed at various meetings, Mr. Meighen stated to the Canadian Press that there was no reason whatever for the discussion of the subject or for the passing of such resolutions. The subject had not been so much as mentioned, and manifestly no such action could be in contemplation.

AN INTERNATIONAL STRIKE.

Europe Faces New Sort of Labor Trouble.

GENEVA, Aug. 31.—An international miners' strike will be definitely declared, should the British miners decide to this effect, a The strike was arranged between the British miners' delegates and the Germans, French and Belgians during their conference in Geneva in the first week of August.

It is learned now that as soon as the British miners strike, no coal from Germany, Belgium or France will be allowed to leave for England. The miners in these countries will cease work and demand nationalization of the mines. The International Miners' Federation will also appeal to the United States miners not to allow coal to leave the United States.

The result of the ballot for a strike in Great Britain was openly foretold at the opening of the annual Miners' Congress here. There was, it is now said, a solemn agreement between the leaders, president of the British Miners' Federation, Otto Hue, the German miners' leader, and the French, Belgian and other European leaders, to stick to one another through thick and thin during the coming international strike.

In the meantime, the anxiety in commercial circles on the continent is very great, and it is feared that, should wiser counsels not prevail and a universal coal strike occur, the whole of Europe will be paralyzed. As it is, the railways, gas works and factories have only enough in Canada's reserve of coal, and a stoppage of railway and steamship traffic may cause general food shortage.

The International Labor Office in Geneva appears helpless in the face of this situation. It has not hitherto come to the front as the various labor organizations of the world, so that observers here believe it cannot have any real influence upon them. Moreover, the unemployment which united the Labor Office referred to it afterwards as a "white elephant."

REVOLT IN CHINA.

Gunboats Will Guard Foreign Residents.

SWATOW, China, Aug. 31.—Hundreds of Kwangtung soldiers are passing through here daily, converging on Chaochowfu. Japanese destroyers and a British gunboat and submarine have anchored in the harbor for the protection of the foreign residents. Swatow is isolated from communication except by couriers.

Gen. Chan Ching-Ming, the leader of the revolt, has his headquarters here, receiving reports of the activities at the front and sending orders by coolie runners.

Gen. Chan Ching-Ming has appointed Hung Chiang, graduate of a French University, Commissioner of Foreign Affairs. Wang Chung-Chang called on the foreign consuls and assured them that their nationals would be safe. He said that Gen. Chan Ching-Ming was certain to capture Canton.

Gen. Tang Ch-Yao, commander of Yunnan Province, is reported to be marching with his army to help Chan Ching-Ming Yunnan forces advancing on Canton from the south, while the Kwangtung forces divided into three bodies, advance from the north. Preparations for the revolt started in June. Though several officers of the Kwangtung army suspected of disloyalty were executed, the Swatow organization continued until the Kwangtung and Yunnan forces revolted simultaneously on August 14. Several battalions of the Wwangsi army deserted bodily and joined the revolution.

BRITISH FREEDOM.

May Grant Native Rule to Mesopotamia.

LONDON, Aug. 31.—According to the Daily Mail it has been decided to grant self-rule to Mesopotamia, and also an Arab Cabinet, with their advisors in charge of the administration. It is understood that control will be given if the Arabs create a native prince as governor.

The present serious unrest in Mesopotamia is primarily due to the fact that the administration of the country has been entirely in the hands of British officials. If remains to be decided to what extent control in the hands of natives, it will be a great step towards peace.

The outlook is safe, as it was announced that native rule would be conceded to Egypt.

Bush Fires Menace Settlers.

PRINCE ALBERT, Sask., Aug. 31. —That the Porcupine soldier settlement district is menaced by two great bush fires which are converging on it, is the information brought to the city by the wife of the administrator of the settlement, who arrived from Prairie River to ask the soldiers' settlement board if it is safe, as it was feared that the documents of the headquarters of the settlement there would be destroyed. The soldier settlers are camping in the bush.

Fires are now raging from Birch River to Star City along the line of the Canadian National Railway. It is feared that quite a number of settlers in this area are burned out.

Singing In the Bathroom.

An impulse that apparently is familiar to most people, to burst into song when in a bathroom, is explained by a British scientist as being an induced effect of the music of running water, which virtually sounds the pitch for the occupant of the tub. The resonance of the room encourages the effect, giving an unaccustomed quality to the voice, says Popular Mechanics. In other rooms the furnishings break up the vibrations and destroy the tone, making the contrast quite conspicuous.

"What is the use of me giving you a penny; how long will you have it?" replied her mother.

Precision.

"How much is this pair of shoes worth?" inquired the cautious trader.

"I'm unable to inform you as to its intrinsic value," replied the haughty salesman. "All I can tell you is the price."

Toronto in 1795

As you glide off across the lake to Niagara, or even as you sail over to the Island, try and visualize the Toronto that lined these shores on a 1st of July, 1795. Imagine the giant pines which stood on the site of the present skyscrapers, picture the primeval forest starting south of College street. Canada has fared far on the road of nationhood since the Fathers of Confederation shaped her destiny in 1867, and Toronto beginning as a tiny hamlet in the forest is the Dominion's second city. It scarcely seems credible that the infant Toronto of 1795 had a possible rival in Fort Erie, and that even as to-day, the building trade 125 years ago was afflicted with a shortage of labor and material. Nevertheless, such seemed to be the case.

In the Toronto Reference Library there is a quaint and apparently unknown little volume privately published at Philadelphia in 1795, which had something to say about "Toronto," from an English visitor's viewpoint. This early traveler had come up from New York by sailing ship, stage coach and canoe.

Newark on whose site stands Niagara-on-the-Lake, was, if you please, the chief place in the province then. But both Toronto and Fort Erie were promising hatches. It was a race between the two, according to the be-wigged ad ruffled English writer. Says he in part, "Besides Newark there are several important situations in this part of the province, which bid fair to become places of consequence—Fort Erie, the head of Lake Erie and York, called by the natives Toronto."

Even then the prophetic eye of the traveler seemed to visualize the future for the harbor and the city bordering it—York, formerly Toronto," continues he, "is situated on the harbor round the lake — along the shores of which great quantities of fish are caught. A town is here in great forwardness and should the seat of government be removed from Newark thence as it is contemplated, it will soon become a flourishing place."

"From York to Lake Simcoe a tier of lots of 100 acres each is laid out on each side of the road called Dundas street, granted for the express condition of building and improving on them within one year of the time they are taken up. Many of these places are now built upon and occupied."

The German settlement, evidently around Schomberg and the Oak Ridges, is referred to, "On the east side," continues this writer, "and joining the rear of these lots is a settlement of near 100 German families on an excellent tract of land, much of which is white oak woods. These Germans came in this summer, furnished with everything necessary to make their situation comfortable. They are supported by a company which has liberally supplied them with teams, farming utensils and provisions, sent them a clergyman of their own country and is about to build them mills, a church and a school house."

Then referring again to York, he remarks, "Orchards are in a great state of forwardness for the age of this settlement, some of which already bear fruit. Peaches, cherries and currants are plentiful among the first settlers. The farmers raise great quantities of pork without much expense—and often kill the hogs out in the woods, well fattened on nuts. Many valuable streams for waterworks (did he ever dream that the mighty Niagara would be so harnessed), run in every direction through the country, and on some of them are mills built, which prove lucrative to their owners, particularly sawmill, for the quantities of good timber and great demand for boards as more buildings are going on than carpenters and masons can be found to finish. Stones being scarce, bricks are greatly used in mason work."

Unfortunately none of these earlier buildings in Toronto survived as the town was burned by the Americans in 1813.

One is apt to forget that the great city of Toronto began as a soldier settlement. Remarks the traveler of 125 years ago, "This settlement was begun by a few disbanded troops after the peace of 1783, and being but little known to the people of the United States, who had imbibed an idea that this was entirely under the control of the military, few emigrants bent their course this way until they were convinced of the civil government being well established and upon a constitution happily adapted to the minds of the people. Since which members of respectable inhabitants have come in from the United States. Some have come in wagons from North Carolina."

Even in those pioneer days customs house officers kept a keen watch at the international border to prevent smuggling. Oswego, then a British possession, was a port of entry to Canada. "The high prices which hatters' fur (beaver, of which tall hats used to be made) commands in the United States is the only inducement," states the traveler, "which I could see for the smuggling past this post. For except a few articles imported from the West Indies, I found the retail shops at Kingston and Niagara selling as low as, and in many articles, particularly woolens, lower than in the city of Philadelphia."

Deer and Bear on Village Street.

In Bancroft, Hastings County, a deer was seen on one of the principal streets of the village. A dog barked at it, and it jumped the fence and took to the woods. A black bear was also seen on a Bancroft street recently.

Sugar Industry Is Bound To Bring Great Wealth To Pearl of the Antilles

JAMAICA, the Pearl of the Antilles, is the second oldest colonial possession of the crown. It is situated in the Western Caribbean, in close proximity to Cuba and Haiti. Jamaica, which has as dependencies the Cayman Islands to the northwest, and the Turks and Caicos Islands to the northeast 450 miles distant, is the largest of the British islands in the Caribbean. For centuries the colony has been regarded as one of the most important, if not the most important, outposts of Empire in that quarter; it has certainly increased considerably since the opening of the Panama Canal, not only from a commercial point of view, but also from the strategic side, standing as it does between Europe and America; and, with the canal 500 miles immediately to the south, Jamaica offers special advantages for trade, not only between the points mentioned above, but also to places in the Pacific.

First a Spanish colony, Jamaica in 1665 passed into British hands, the Spaniards surrendering on May 11 of that year to a force of 8,000 troops under Gen. Venables, Admiral Penn and Capt. Butler. Nelson, Rodney, Benbow, and Hyde-Parker were closely associated with Jamaica. Benbow is buried in the parish church of Kingston. A statue to Rodney stands in the public square of Spanish Town, the former capital of the island. Nelson passed a portion of his career at Fort Charles, Port Royal, and on the ramparts of the old fort there is still to be seen a slab which serves to remind those who are permitted to visit the spot that "in this house the great Horatio Nelson dwelt: seek to emulate his noble example all who pass this spot in the service of the Empire."

Jamaica is a crown colony. She surrendered her political constitution in 1866, when her finances were in a parlous state. In 1884 there was a "step in advance," it being decided that the people's representatives should be in the majority in the Legislative Council; at the same time power was given the chief executive to bring in additional nominated members which would give the Government the majority, should such a step be necessary. From 1899 until the present time, the Government majority has been maintained. On the elected side there are 14 members, for Jamaica is divided into 14 parishes; on the Government side there are 15 members. On a financial question, however, the issue is decided if nine elected members vote together, for or against. The governor has a Privy Council of six or seven members, the majority being officials; not even one member of the elected side of the Legislative Council is on the Privy Council. An agitation has been started for a new constitution which will give the people a wider measure in the management of the colony's affairs, by establishing a House of Assembly and a Governor-in-Executive Committee.

The entire island of 4,450 square miles is fanned by breezes that come up from the blue Caribbean, with a temperature of between 80 and 90 degrees on some of the coastlands to 45 degrees in the mountain sections. A magnificent land-locked harbor at Kingston—one of the seven best in the world—Borge Islands, off Montego Bay, and Navy Island at Port Antonio, add to the tropical beauty of Jamaica. With an interior famous for foliage of almost every description, and large streams and waterfalls, a scene presents itself to the traveler that is almost unsurpassed in any part of the world.

The island's population of about 900,000 includes several classes—whites, colored, blacks, East Indians, Chinese, and Assyrians. Unfortunately, adverse economic conditions within past years have caused many thousands of the inhabitants to emigrate to Central America, Cuba, and North America to earn their livelihood. Thousands of Jamaicans assisted in building the Panama Canal. Thousands are employed on the Isthmus; others have obtained land in the interior of Panama and are adding to the wealth of the republic by tilling the soil.

Millions of cocoanuts are exported annually to Europe and America; with one possible exception (the Republic of Guatemala) Jamaica produces the finest quality bananas in the New World; her luscious oranges and grapefruit are known afar; her spices have made her famous; and in this connection Jamaica is the only place in which pimento of the proper quality is grown; the coffee trade is once more expanding, and the celebrated Blue Mountain grade is bringing record prices; this year the cocoa crop should realize £300,000, surpassing all previous figures in the history of the present generation. Within decline in cane years ago, vast tracts of land were brought under banana cultivation, for which a profitable market obtains in Great Britain and North America.

But, with the revival of the sugar industry banana lands in certain districts are being used for cane culture. It is no longer a case of the majority of the planters putting all their eggs into one basket. Bananas are still their way, but the future of the colony is bound up with cane, and it is gratifying to note that a big sugar industry is making. Modern factories are being erected, old mills have in some directions given way to new appliances, and sugar, as also its by-product rum, is again becoming the staple industry. Last year Jamaica produced 50,000 tons of sugar; this year it is hoped that the output will be 80,000 tons, and there is no reason why the output should not exceed 120,000 tons.

HISTORIC HAMILTON.

Men From Ambitious City Who Are Known to Fame.

The Canadian Historian has done something more than earn for itself the fame of being the Birmingham of Canada. It has contributed much to the intellectual power of the nation. The visitor to Hamilton sees Dundurn Castle and is reminded of the name and fame of Sir Alan MacNab. He sees the water-stairway of the days when the struggle for constitutional institutions was so hard and fast. Shouldering his musket as a schoolboy in 1812, he took his part in the defence of Toronto, serving partly in the navy and partly in the militia. Retiring as a captain, one of the highest degrees of the Royal Canadian Order, he rose to "the 32nd degree" of Masonry in connection with the Caroline affair, is a matter of history, together with his leadership of the "Men of Gore." A recently published volume of memoirs has recalled the fact that the use of this "horrid and repulsive title by a body of civilized men" gained for the "rebels" some sympathy in England at the time! The loyal inhabitants of the Ware district were apparently regarded "over there" as a species of transatlantic Bashi-Bazouk. From Hamilton also came J. Aemilius Irving and his son, Sir Aemilius J. Irving, and other Bar. Recently these columns contained a reference to the public services of Mr. Adam Brown, who a few weeks ago celebrated his 94th birthday and is still active as postmaster of Hamilton.

Another eminent Hamiltonian, who may almost be said to live in the sacred groves of Academus, has done much that is not generally known in the task of advancing the scholastic knowledge of his fellow-men and has also done the state much service in the Parliamentary and political arena. Mr. H. B. Witton, who was born in 1821, may be regarded as a local Crichton, so varied is the field of knowledge which he has explored.

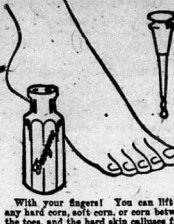
The archives of the Hamilton Association (Literature, Science and Arts) and other depositaries of the sweets of intellectual acquirement bear witness to the extent of his knowledge. Geology and the marine secrets associated with Burlington Bay and vicinity have been dealt with by him in an illuminating manner.

But the studies of the sage of Hamilton are not confined to the earth or the things under it. He has soared to the celestial regions and a very able article by him, on the science of selenography, published not long ago, has cast much light on the obscure mysteries of the "queen of night." In the "science," as it has been termed, of Egyptology, Mr. Witton has also studied deeply and dealt with the more or less fantastic theories of some of the speculative schools. And in "modern literature" he has been a careful investigator and patient student. One of his most interesting and instructive later expositions has been a study of the famous "Paston Letters," that interesting collection of more than a thousand documents written to, or by, members of the Paston family, of Norfolk, England (the county of Mr. Witton's family), and which throw so strong a sidelight on the condition of the kingdom during the Wars of the Roses. This doyen of science and literature has not confined his efforts solely thereto or forgotten that he possessed a citizen's responsibilities. In 1873, in company with the late D. B. Chisholm, he contested the city money as a "workingman's candidate" and defeated the late Sir Aemilius Irving and Mr. Charles Magill. His term in the Commons was one of the great events and bitter fights. The "Pacific Scandal" incident resulted in the resignation of the Government of Sir John Macdonald and the calling of Hon. Alexander Mackenzie to form a Cabinet. A dissolution followed shortly after, and it was through Mr. Witton's influence that Sir John was retained as the party leader.

Now, in a room lined from floor to ceiling with the "friends that never fail," as the French proverb has it, one of the choicest private libraries in Canada, Mr. Witton continues his studies and benefits his fellowbeings with the result.

Lift off Corns!

Doesn't hurt a bit and Freezone costs only a few cents.



With your fingers! You can lift off any hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes, and the hard skin calluses from bottom of feet.

A tiny bottle of "Freezone" costs little at any drug store; apply a few drops upon the corn or callus. Instantly it stops hurting, then shortly you lift that bothersome corn or callus right off, root and all, without one bit of pain or soreness. Truly! No humbug!

WONDERS OF WIRELESS.

Hundreds of Different Wireless Stations Throughout World.

These strange signals which are being caught at wireless stations on different parts of our planet are a problem to the big scientists themselves. How much more, then, must they puzzle the brains of the ordinary people? asks Pearson's Weekly.

There are hundreds of different wireless stations. Why, then, asks the man in the street, is it that only one station here and there picks up these incomprehensible sounds from the void?

The answer is this — that each sending or receiving instrument can be tuned, like a fiddle or banjo string, to send or receive signals of a certain wave length. A receiver tuned to catch a short wave cannot take a long one, and vice versa.

Now the waves which bring these signals from the unknown are of great length. Consequently the ordinary receiver tuned for taking ordinary messages does not recognize them.

The bigger the station, and the greater the sending distance, the longer—as a rule—is the wave used. Take Clifden in Ireland and Glace Bay in Nova Scotia as an example. It is between these two—a distance of 2,300 miles—that the transatlantic wireless service is carried on. The wires used for sending or receiving are about 1,000 feet long, and are stretched at a height of about 200 feet. The wave length employed is 20,000 feet—that is, each wave or ripple is nearly four miles long from crest to crest. Fifty thousand of these waves are emitted each second, and the waves rush through the ether across the Atlantic at a speed of 186,300 miles per second, and so take one seventy-fifth part of a second to fly from one side of the Atlantic to the other.

The signals that have been coming in from space—perhaps from Mars—are produced by other waves even longer than those used by the giant stations which span the Atlantic.

The War's Oldest Soldier.

The oldest soldier who served in the war is said to be William Clarke, who is now living at Shamley Green, near Guildford. When in his 73rd year, 60 years after he enlisted in the Royal Welsh Regiment, he joined the Royal Defence Corps, and served at Felixstowe until invalided. He is now in his 76th year.

OWEN SOUND.

The Baby City Has a Very Long History.

After having been a town for sixty-two years, Owen Sound has at last become a city. The figures of the assessor, just completed, show that the population is 12,218. The bill of incorporation was passed in the legislature the other day.

The story of this new Ontario city goes back to the time when Samuel de Champlain, the first intrepid white man to pass through this province, paddled into the Georgian Bay, taking possession of this vast body of water in the name of the greatest monarch of Europe, Louis XIV., King of France. Hearing the Indians of his party call this big inland stretch of water "Lake Manitou," which means in their language, "The Lake of the Great Spirit," Champlain adopted that name in French. It was only after Canada was ceded to Britain by France this was changed to Lake Huron, in honor of George III., reigning in England at that time.

The name of the town itself came from Edward W. Campbell Rich Owen, who is supposed to have entered the Sound in May, 1786, and in 1789. He was one of the officers on the "Unregenable," which his grandfather, Sir Thomas Rich, rear admiral in the navy, commanded.

The man who really founded Owen Sound, however, had the distinction of coming from Toronto. Fifty-six years ago, a white-winged schooner, called "The Fly," sailed into the bay, and landed Mr. Stephens from Toronto on the shore. And Mr. Stephens had the fixed intention of founding a town. He immediately built a grist mill, a saw mill, to provide lumber for homes, a general store, and a potash mill at Inglis Falls. So successful was he that the steamer that plied between Sarnia and Sturgeon Falls began to touch at Owen Sound just two years after Stephens opened his store.

The first village was called Sydenham in 1841, likely by John Telfer, then sheriff, in honor of the then Lord Sydenham, first governor of the United Canadas. His was the only log house there when Stephens arrived. It was a most forbidding place then, we are told by Rev. W. W. Smith, an eminent clergyman and historian of Owen Sound. "The flat upon which the town stands was covered with very heavy hemlocks, maple, and elm, with a butternut tree here and there on the banks of the river; and near the water cedars grew or rotted in the stream." Towards the bay, he says, the woods degenerated into a cedar swamp, alive with frogs and mosquitos. So dismal and trying was the situation in the early days, it is said, that whiskey was considered one of the indispensible necessities of life. So indispensable was it considered by the profiteers that no sooner had a schooner left the shore than the price was boosted to $1 a gallon, a significant situation in those days.

When the town was incorporated under its present name, however, in 1856, it was a vastly different place than forty-five years before, when what is now the principal street was "slashed" and logged up. At the present time Owen Sound is the most thriving and most lavishly gifted by nature of the young cities of the province. It is blessed with one of the finest harbors on the Great Lakes. Authorities say that the bay is 578 feet above sea level, and over 800 feet deep at the mouth. Connected with the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific railways pass through the town. Shipbuilding plants, busy foundries, fruit packing and canning factories, flour and saw mills, every kind of machinery shops from turbine water wheels to bolts and screws, are among its numerous industries. Comparatively few cities in Canada can boast that their water supply is obtained by gravitation, but such is the case in Owen Sound. From the Sydenham river the water runs for miles through pipes and a slow sand filter into the mains and reservoirs, with a capacity of 600,000 and 5,000,000 gallons, respectively. The assessment has risen to $7,182,942. This is the proud record of the capital of Grey County, now graduated into a city's rank and responsibilities.

CHILDLESS WOMEN

Please Read This Letter And See What Normal Health Will Do For You.

Berwick, Ont.—"I had organic trouble, and after taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Medicine all my troubles passed away. I was made strong and well and have been ever since. Now we have a fine baby boy six months old, and I know that I would not have this baby and would still be suffering if it had not been for your remedies. My husband and myself say that your remedies are worth their weight in gold, and I recommend them to my friends. One of my aunts is taking them now."—Mrs. NAPOLEON LAVIGNE, Berwick, Ontario, Canada.

Among the virtues of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is its ability to correct sterility in many cases. This fact is well established as evidenced by the above letter and hundreds of others we have published in these columns.

In many other homes, once childless, there are now children because of the fact that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound makes women normal, healthy and strong.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

Queerest of the Metals.

Mercury is called "quick" silver because it seems as if alive, so lively is the way in which it runs about. It is a fluid—that is to say, molten —at temperatures which render other metals solid.

The ore from which it is derived is a mixture of sulphur and mercury, called "cinnabar," and when very pure is in color a brilliant vermillion. It is from this source, indeed, that vermilion used to be obtained. Nowadays, however, it is usually made by heating mercury together with sulphur, potash and water.

To get the mercury from the ore it is necessary merely to separate it from the sulphur with which it is chemically combined, and this is accomplished by roasting. The ore goes from the crusher into a furnace, where high heat volatilizes the quicksilver, the latter being thereupon precipitated pure in a water-jacketed "condenser." Out of the condenser it runs in a silvery stream, and is put up in wrought-iron flasks for market.

Some tribes of California Indians have used cinnabar for red paint since prehistoric times, frescoing their faces and bodies with it, and it was observation of this circumstance that led to the discovery of the famous quicksilver mines of the state. Occasionally a miner will pick penetrates a pocket that contains a cupful or more of pure mercury.

When reduced to low temperature to a solid, quicksilver becomes very malleable, and can be beaten into sheets as thin as tissue paper.

The metal has a strong affinity for gold, and is much used in connection with gold mining. During the war it was multiplied many times owing to the need of fulminate of mercury for cartridge caps, shell fuses and detonators for all sorts of projectiles.

Thoughtful Child.

"Have you said your prayers?" asked Willie's mother.

"Of course!" replied the child.

"And did you ask to be made a better little boy?"

"Yes, and I put in a word for you and father, too."

Watered Stock

If we had been paying dividends on "watered stock"—

If we had issued stock to shareholders at less than its par value and were asking for revenues to pay dividends on such issues—

Then we would expect the public to take the position that we had no right to increased rates!

But we have done neither of these things. On the contrary our plant represented, in actual cash invested, up to December 31st 1919, $16,000,000 more than our combined stock and bond issue.

By turning back into the business all surplus earnings, all idle reserve funds, we have kept the demands upon our revenues for dividends and interest down to a minimum—lower in proportion to the investment than any enterprise we know of.

But now, with the keen competition for money, we must make sure of such a return on our investment as will attract new capital.

An adequate rate for our service is the only means of accomplishing this. No one has found any other solution.

Great Mackerel Mystery.

Why mackerel should swim in a tank from left to right, and never otherwise, is a problem which the united intelligence of all members of the Sussex Sea Fisheries Committee has failed to solve.

It is known as the great mackerel mystery. For more than thirty years the Brighton Aquarium has kept mackerel. When first introduced to their glass tank, they persisted in trying to swim through the glass, to their grievous bodily harm. Presently an island was set up in the middle of their lake. Accidents at once ceased, and for more than twenty years the mackerel have been swimming steadily round that island, by day and by night, in season and out of season, and never once have they been observed to swim from right to left.—Tit Bits.

A Hall of Fame.

Women in England are not without their hall of fame. In the lady chapel of the great cathedral in Liverpool is a magnificent array of stained glass windows in commemoration of the deeds of good women. All the famous women of the Old and New Testaments are commemorated, but by far the most interesting are the windows commemorating the deeds of great women of modern times, among them Susanna Wesley, Elizabeth Fry, Grace Darling, Queen Victoria, Elizabeth Barrett Browning and numerous others.

ONTARIO MARRIAGES.

Figures Indicate Some Odd and Interesting Facts.

Nobody seems to know why June is the favored time for marriage ceremonies, but it was so regarded even by the ancient Romans, the junior branch of whose legislature (juniores) probably gave the month its name.

A Canadian who likes statistics has figured that in Canada there are now more brides of 20 to 24 than of any other age, and more grooms of 25 to 29. These things are all tabulated mathematically nowadays, and that is the way it has worked out in other years. The popular idea that modern conditions has postponed the marrying age of the fair sex until after 25 is reached is not borne out by the Ontario Government's statistics, which show for one year 1,939 Toronto brides between 20 and 24, as compared with 1,129 between 25 and 29, which means that over 70 per cent. more marry at the earlier of these age-groups. The number of women under 80 who wed in Toronto in a year is 3,833, as compared with 1,157 older women, the latter figure of course including many second marriages. So that when one score years and ten have slipped by, the feminine chances of matrimony appear to be about one in four, as recorded by those of younger folk. The following table of Toronto marriage ages tells the story:

Age.	Actual Number Groom	Bride	Percentage of Total Groom	Bride
15-19 ..	199	765	4	15
20-24 ..	1,371	1,939	28½	39
25-29 ..	1,461	1,129	29	22½
30-34 ..	724	514	14½	10
35-39 ..	574	314	11½	6
40-44 ..	267	157	5½	3
45-49 ..	171	91	3½	2
50-54 ..	96	39	—	—
55-59 ..	51	23	—	—
60-64 ..	48	10	—	—
65-70 ..	18	2	—	—
70 and up	10	2	*4½	*2

*From 50 upwards.

The statistics reveal many illassorted couples so far as age is concerned. Three grooms of fifteen to nineteen years marry women of seventy-five to twenty-nine, and one woman of thirty-four. The two brides of 70 or over wedded grooms of 55-59 and 60-65, respectively. One groom of 70 or over took a bride in the 25-29 group. It may be added that the Toronto figures are typical proportionately of those of other English-speaking sections of Canada.

The modern marriage ceremony differs little from that of our forefathers, when the bride was taken for fairer for fouler" and promised to be "buxom and bonny." The ring (symbol of that which is without end) was in one of the fingers of each and the left-hand fingers in turn by the groom. In Anglo-Saxon days it was part of the "wed" or pledge, from which the word wedding is derived, and was given by the groom in childhood betrothals and thereafter worn on the right hand until marriage, when the father drew the two from the bride's finger and put them on the left hand. Since the Welsh law allowed the husband to discipline his wife by means of "three blows with a broomstick" in any part of the person except the head." This "fair allowance," as the law called it, was not to be administered with a stick longer than the husband's arm nor thicker than his middle finger." But there is none of that sort of authority in this June of 1920. And the "best man" need no longer have the qualifications which earned him that name in days when the groom had to surround his bride with a retinue of his "best" or strongest friends, lest some other suitor snach her away. Fears of that sort of thing have vanished. But high rents and high prices have taken their place as sources of worry.

A Gifted Canadian.

Musical critics in London, England, speak of the "extraordinary enthusiastic" reception given to Mme. Peggy Murray, the Canadian "diseuse," at her recital she gave at the Steinway hall. The audience included a number of prominent Canadians. Mme. Murray's rendering of some of W. H. Drummond's "Habitant" poems was particularly pleasing ,especially "Leetle Ba'tiste," "The Snow Bird," "The Red Canoe," and "The Nice Leetle Canadienne." Perhaps the best of her program, however, were Kipling's "How the Rhino Got His Skin" and J. Whitcomb Riley's "Bear Story." Miss Murray was born at Ottawa, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. V. Poupe, and is the wife of Mr. Webster Murray, the artist, who is the son of Dr. Murray of Toronto.

MONTREAL WOMAN GAINED 20 POUNDS

Had Spent Hundreds of Dollars Without Benefit—Like New Woman Now.

"Tanlac has brought me health, strength and happiness, and I am glad of the opportunity to give my testimonial, which I sincerely hope will be of benefitto others," said Mrs. Phileas Goude, residing at 72 Massue street, one of the most highly esteemed women of Quebec, in an interview, a few days ago.

Mrs. Goude, in relating her experience also reported a gain of 20 pounds in weight and her statement while indeed remarkable, is by no means unusual, as many thousands have testified to having used Tanlac with the same wonderful results.

Captain Phileas Goude, Mrs. Goude's husband, has been a navigator for forty years and is widely known, especially in maritime circles.

"I just seems I am starting life all anew," explained Mrs. Goude, "for I no longer feel the same person." My health has been in such a bad fix for the past forty years, that is until I took Tanlac, that I was always sick. I was troubled so with indigestion that had ceased eating any kind of substantial food. In fact, nothing agreed with me, and I had pains all over my body. My arms and legs, especially, hurt me dreadfully. Even the white part of eggs caused me trouble and I had gotten where the only nourishment I could take was milk and vichy water. Three months ago I was brought home from Montreal lying on a bed and just suffering agony. I had become so nervous that even the crumbling of a newspaper annoyed me and I have gone through many a night unable to close my eyes in sleep. All energy and strength left me and I felt many times that I had come to the end of my way. My heart would often beat so hard and fast from the gas on my stomach that I thought that I could not live.

"Many hundreds of dollars have been spent on my case, but nothing ever seemed to give me a particle of relief until I began taking Tanlac. I am the mother of twenty children and have had much experience with medicines, having taken most every kind myself, but I owe all the praise, thanks and gratitude for my wonderful recovery to nothing but Tanlac. The very first bottle of Tanlac made a decided change in me, and since I have finished my fourth bottle I am feeling just like a new woman. I have an appetite like I have never had before and meats nor anything else I eat hurts me in the least. Since beginning taking Tanlac my weight has increased twenty pounds, and my strength has returned so that I can now do all my housework without feeling tired except in the natural way. My pains have all disappeared. I sleep soundly all night long and get up mornings thoroughly rested and feeling fine. My nerves are again normal and I have regained all my energy. Words cannot fully expres the gratitude I really feel, and I want to recommend Tanlac to all others who may be suffering from stomach trouble and a run-down condition like I was before taking this grandest of all medicines."

Tanlac is sold in Napanee at WALLACE'S Drug Store, in Camden East by R. J. LOSTER, in Wagarville by S. JACKSON. (advt.)

EDUCATIONAL MOVIES

EXPERIMENT MADE IN SCHOOLS OF TORONTO.

Each Inspectorate Has a Moving Picture Machine and the Boys Have Been Taught to Run Them—The Screen Has Proved an Aid to the Study of Geography.

SOME months ago the Board of Education supplied to each inspectorate in the city of Toronto a motion-picture machine and a high-power projection lantern for the use of the schools. Equipped with double, close-fitting blinds and a drop screen, every kindergarten assumed the properties of a fairly complete theatre.

This outright recognition of the importance of motion pictures in child education was a logical and excellent action. Every teacher has had experience of the potency of the movies. In every class, barring the lowest, there are always pupils whose mentality is low-grade and work almost negligible, but who, in oral composition, amaze one with the wealth of detail, fidelity and vivid realism with which they can describe a movie thriller seen the night before. That faculty is now about to be capitalized.

Enclosed in a neat case very much like a suitcase, the machines are portable and can be set-up in a very few minutes. When the equipment was bought, it was suggested to the board that a director of motion pictures should be appointed. This, however, after some discussion was vetoed. And the majority of teachers warmly approved the decision. In their candid opinion there are already enough supervisors—too many, in fact.

So simple are the machines in construction and mechanism that a mere boy could run one after twenty minutes' instruction. Indeed, in one school at least, the principal has intrusted the entire operation of a machine to a senior boy. This lad has become so expert that other schools have borrowed him on occasion.

Education films are obtained from a company specializing in them and from the Ontario Provincial Motion Picture Bureau. It may surprise many to learn that the Provincial Government has filmed many industries, processes, provincial beauty spots, and various other subjects —all to inform people regarding their own province. These films are available, free of charge, to any school that cares to send for them.

Some idea of the interesting scope of these pictures may be gained from a few of the titles: "Grain and Milling," "Iron and Steel," "Wool from Fleece to the Finished Product," "The Rival of Daylight," "The Glens of Elora," "Silver Mining in Ontario," "Building Canada's Mercantile Marine," "Salt—From Mother Earth to the Table," "Where Rail and Water Meet (a) A Unique Engineering Feat, (b) The Falls at Kakabeka, (c) The World's Largest Grain Elevator, (d) A Night on a Lighthouse," "Tilling the Waters," "A Springtime Harvest," "Ontario's Playgrounds," "Harvesting of the Sea," "A Glimpse of Muskoka," "The Provincial Algonquin Park," "Ontario Fisheries," "The Story of Paper," "Flax for Fibre and Seed," "What's Under the Fleece?" "The Making of Bread," "The Gasoline Engine," "The Fall Fair," "Reforesting," "Beauty Spots in Northern Ontario," "Fire Protection in Northern Ontario," "The Great Clay Belt," "Insects of the Home Garden," "Butter-making in New Ontario," "How Canadian Cheese is Made," "Marketing the Peach Crop—Niagara District."

At present, the only thing that prevents unlimited use of motion pictures in teaching is the lack of suitable films. Even geography is about the sole subject even touched upon by producers. How vitalized and vivid history will become when the life of the Frenchman and the taking of Quebec can be faithfully reproduced on the school screen! Even such unpicturesque subjects as arithmetic, grammar and spelling would lend themselves admirably to motion-picture presentation. As for art, think of the masterpieces that could be introduced to every child if the projection lantern were employed to picture the great painters, the most beautiful bits of architecture, and the world's choicest sculpture.

Motion pictures will make the city children as great lovers of nature as the rural children. The chief reason for their thoughtlessness in regard to nature is their ignorance. Recently an illustrated lecture on birds was given in one of the Toronto schools by a university professor and the pupils were astonished in surprise when he told them there were more than thirty different kinds of sparrows, and showed them the difference on the screen. And an hour later, those same children left the kindergarten with a much greater respect for bird life. Understanding had done that for them, and the screen had made that understanding possible.

CHAPTER IV.

The two old Kips sat brooding over their mystery. The fruit of their almost forgotten romance, the little squalling, helpless baby that had come to them and strangely evolved into a great, grown man, was now in the toils of romance in his turn. He had found, in a far city, somebody there that he loved better than his family or his friends or his freedom.

Daphne was delighted at first. Then she realized that the news of his marriage would throw her own plans into disarray. She sighed:

"I suppose I'd better postpone my wedding till we get Bayard off our hands."

"That's a fine idea!" her father exclaimed. It was always a joy to him to defer an expense. Mrs. Kip flung him a glare and Daphne rolled her eyes in distress, but he redeemed himself with an unexpectedly graceful turn. "It lets us keep Daphne with us a little longer."

Daphne wrote this new decision to Clay, and sent back a letter that fairly howled with protest.

When Daphne told her parents of Clay's anguish they made light of it. It was a long, long while since they had been young. They had learned that marriages contain surprises that may sometimes be postponed without misfortune.

"That's a Fine Idea," Her Father Exclaimed.

Bayard did not write again for several days. This time he wrote to Daphne:

Dear Sis—Yours of no date (as usual) received and beautiful contents noted. I can hardly believe that my little sis is announcing intention to join the procession and get married, too. You're more sensible than I used to think. This is subject to revision when I know who the lucky man is. Who is he? Some Cleveland Apollo (or however you spell it), I suppose.

Before I could write you a bombshell exploded in the office. Heads of firm decided that since we can't sell any goods in America, might try England. They want me to go over at once and see what can be done about establishing a selling agency in dear old Lunnon, doncher know. And so now I intend to combine business trip, vacation, and honeymoon in same voyage. So we get married Thursday and sail Saturday. Just time to get settled in our dove-cote before leaving.

Was worrying over not being able to accept your kind offer to pay me a visit. Then the blessed wifelet daringly suggested that her sweet sister-in-law-to-be should come to New York and make our apartment her home while she shops.

We won't get back from honeymoon bliss for six weeks at least. You and mother just settle down there until you have finished shopping. Will leave key and instructions with superintendant.

The letter ended with the usual oceans of love and kisses and the usual haste. It set the family to pondering. Old Wesley was the first to speak and his train of thought startled the women:

"So he's going to get married tomorrow. That's awful sudden! Saves us buying a wedding present, though!" When he had recovered from the impact of his wife's look he saved himself again with a quick, pleading suggestion: "What I was thinking was—it leaves more money for Daphne's trousseau."

The poor wretch had grown used to seeing unexpected gifts of fortune float into view like soap bubbles, drift close in iridescent loveliness, and then wink out, leaving hardly a damp spot.

As soon as he had bravely added what he had saved from his son's wedding to what he had already voted to his daughter's trousseau he was doomed to learn that Daphne could not stand East to buy clothes to be married in until she had bought some clothes to start East in. And, besides that, she could not go East alone, and her mother could not go with her unless her mother had also some new clothes to tide her mother over till her mother could get to New York and buy some clothes to stay married in.

Wesley Kip went forth to peddle that second mortgage. This was a commodity not easy to dispose of, and it took him a week or two to find a purchaser, and then he paid an ingeniously disguised usury for it. But he got the cash.

When he came home he proudly announced that Daphne and her mother could start for New York as soon as they'd a mind to. They had a mind to as soon as their clothes were ready.

He accompanied them to the train. He was not even to have the doleful luxury of seeing them spend his money. But he put a brave front on his folly and his last words to Daphne were:

"Have a good time, honey, and if you see anything you absolutely got to have, just you get it. And if the money you got isn't enough, why, I'll get more somehow. You can usually depend on your old dad to do his best."

He felt repaid when his beautiful child cried, "I know I can! you angel!" and reached high and drew his head down like a faithful camel's. He never told her that she was squeezing his eyeglasses into his nose. He managed not to sneeze at the exquisite agony of her curls tickling his nostrils, and she feasted his hungry ear with eager gratitude.

Daphne slept little that night in her Pullman pigeonhole; she was too busy with her thoughts, and the wheels made a banjo of the rails. But she was glad of her insomnia. Even better than sleeping well is staying awake well.

The train was on time and rolled chariot-smoothly into the Grand Central station. Clay Wimburn was there by special dispensation from the office, and he had had the forethought to secure a permit to come down to the platform. He told the station master that he had a crippled aunt to meet. He did not tell Mrs. Kip that. He let her believe that all doors opened to him.

Daphne had not finished pointing out to her hand luggage to the redcap when Clay's arms were about her. She turned to draw her trusty "Sir" but smothered it on her lips. He charged her mother next, and kissed her well, saying:

"That's not for Bayard; that's for me. How are you, mamma?"

Mrs. Kip blushed and squealed as she had squealed long ago when her first lover s' lo the first kiss.

After making arrangements about the baggage with magnificence and tipping the porter like a freshly hatched millionaire, Clay taxicabbed them to Mr. and Mrs. Bayard's apartment house, a towering habitable chimney on Fifty-ninth street, overlooking Central park and Columbus circle.

The convenience and ingenuity of the apartment enchanted Daphne. It seemed impossible that all this luxury, this ozone of wealth, could be secured in so small a space, on the 14th one floor, the twelfth of a building. Everything came up in baskets by pulley—people, food, everything; it was like a monastery in the mountains—with some differences.

She was grateful beyond words to the young man who embraced her and stared over her shoulder—over her left shoulder—at the tiny commerce of the streets and the toy park. She said to him:

"Oh, Clay, this is heaven! What do you say to our having an apartment just like this? Let's!"

She felt in the arm about her a sudden slackening. The chin on her shoulder seemed to weigh heavier.

"Er—it—would be nice," said Clay.

She turned out of his embrace and looked at him.

He explained: "Do you know how much Bayard pays for these seven rooms and two baths?"

"No."

"Well, I've been looking about for a little nest for us, and I priced one like this. They charge twenty-five hundred dollars a year!"

She asked, shyly, "And that's more than we can afford?" She had no idea what salaries were paid to fairy princes in this city of fabulous wealths. She had merely a glamorous impression that her lover was there to get what she wanted.

"Well, we could afford it, all right," he laughed, meekly, "if we could eat the view and wear the altitude. But we've never talked about money, honey, have we? I suppose we ought to. I don't want to give you any false impressions. Shall we talk about it now?"

"No! please!"

Daphne sat suddenly. She felt as a stranger to tall buildings feels when an express elevator starts downward.

She had rejoiced to think that she was escaping from her father's nagging dollarocracy to a region of love and light. She sorrowed a moment, then she gazed at her lover and saw how anxious he was. Her love came back to her. The express elevator was shooting upward now.

"What does it matter where we live, so long as we have each other?"

"You're a little saint," he said as he took her in a very secular embrace.

And then she began to laugh.

The whimsy struck her that she was like a bird gaining its freedom from a cage only to find itself in a trap. It was a good joke on her. She enjoyed the jokes fate played on her—sometimes—more or less.

CHAPTER V.

He taxicabbed them down to the Knickerbocker and lunched them so lavishly that Daphne and her mother felt thoroughly reassured as to his means. Then he left them and descended to the subway.

Clay had insisted on their dining and theatering with him. They ate at the Astor and he fed them handsomely again. Mrs. Kip managed to catch a glimpse of the bill for the meal. It made her heart ache till she noted that Clay gave the waiter a dollar bill for the tip, without visible excitement on either side. She resolved that Mr. Wimburn must be very rich or very rash.

Next morning the attack on the shops began in earnest. Clay did not lunch with them, and so Daphne and her mother ate in the restaurant of a department store and paid for their own meal. It made a difference. Even the bargain prices for food trailed up unpleasantly, and Mrs. Kip missed Clay's shining presence.

The chaos of the styles was so complete that the two women decided to retire and study out their campaign on the war maps. They began to make out lists and tally up prices. The afternoon went by, and they had accomplished little except an itemized despair.

He Celebrated the New Era With a Twelve-Dollar Dinner at the Plaza.

It's awful, that's what it is; it's simply awful," Mrs. Kip wailed. "It costs a fortune to get nothing at all."

"I guess I'll go home and be an old maid," said Daphne. "Dad's money wouldn't buy me enough to get married in Sandusky."

But when Clay arrived to take them out to dinner he brought romance with him. He had had a good day at the office. There had been a flurry of hope in Wall street, and everybody said that the business world had reached the rock bottom of depression and started up again.

He celebrated the new era with a twelve-dollar dinner at the Plaza and another theater, and after that he made Mrs. Kip accompany them to a roof garden, where Daphne and he danced with other laity in the intervals between professional dances on the floor and vaudeville turns on the stage.

The next day there was another foray on the shops and the dressmakers, with a baffling result. The list of necessaries with their minimum prices began to grow so long and ominous that they decided to give up keeping a list. They would buy what just had to be got, as cheaply as they could, and if they overran their appropriation papa would simply have to help them out.

The wedding date had yet to be fixed and the invitations ordered, with their royal phraseology in the latest formula.

They placed the day late enough for Bayard and his wife to get back from Europe. Bayard had not written, of course, since his marriage, except a brief note from the steamer the day he landed. But he had set six weeks as the limit of his absence.

One evening Clay announced that he had reserved three seats for a new comedy that had opened with success a few nights before. Mrs. Kip begged to be excused from going.

Clay urged her to reconsider her refusal. "Sure you won't go? You ought at least to see the star, Sheila Kemble. Some people say she looks a little like Daphne. Of course she doesn't; she's not a tenth as beautiful or young or attractive, but there is a kind of a resemblance. And they say she gets a thousand dollars a week. Daphne could give her cards and spades and beat her. Sure you won't go?"

"I wouldn't put my poor feet into those tight slippers tonight to see Daphne herself play Lady Macbeth."

So Clay and Daphne went alone.

After the last act he proposed Claremont for supper. Daphne accepted with zest. They entered an open taxicab and scudded up the long bias seam of Broadway to Seventy-second street and whisked across to Riverside drive and up its meandering splendor.

"This is too beautiful to go through so fast," Daphne cried. "It's wonderful. We ought to walk. Promise me we can walk home. It's such a gorgeous night."

"You're crazy, darling," he said. "I've got to get to my office tomorrow, and you've got to get home for breakfast."

"All right for you," she pouted. But it was none too serious a tragedy, and her spirits revived when the taxicab turned in through the shrubs about the old inn that had once been the home of Napoleon's brother and had heard the laughter of Theodosia Burr and of Betty Jumel in their primes.

Daphne did not like the table the head waiter led them to. It missed both the breeze and the view.

"Can't we sit over there?" she said. "I'll see."

The head waiter came reluctantly to his beck. When Clay asked for the table, the answer was curt:

"Sorry, sir; it is reserved."

Clay felt insulted. He whipped out his pocketbook and rebuked the tyrant with a bill. He thought it was a one-dollar bill, but he saw a "V" on it just as the swift and subtle head waiter absorbed it without seeming to. To ask for it back or for change was one of the most impossible things in the world.

Clay made it as easy for his new slave as he could.

"I don't think you understood which table I meant," he said, pointing to the one he had indicated before. "That one."

"Oh, that one!" said the head waiter. "Certainly, sir."

He led the way, beckoning waiters and omnibuses and snapping his fingers.

Clay ordered a supper as chastely perfect as a sonnet. It showed that he had both native ability and education in the art of ordering a meal. He impressed even the head waiter, and that is a triumph. That was Clay's purpose. Also he wanted to preserve his self-respect and the waiter's attention.

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" Made Her Well, Strong and Vigorous

MADAME ARTHUR BEAUCHER

805 Cartier St., Montreal.

"I suffered terribly from Constipation and Dyspepsia for many years. I felt pains after eating and had gas, constant headache, and was unable to sleep at night. I was getting so thin that I was frightened and saw several physicians who, however, did not seem able to help me.

At last a friend advised me to take 'Fruit-a-tives'. I did so and soon I felt some relief. I continued with 'Fruit-a-tives' and in a short time, the Constipation was banished, I felt no more pains or headache or the disagreeable sensations that follow dyspepsia. Now I am well, strong and vigorous."

In the face of the supper that was being ordered at the next table. That was well ordered, too, but it was not a sonnet; it was a rhapsody. It was ordered by a man whose guests had not yet arrived. When Clay had dismissed his waiter he whispered to Daphne:

"See that fellow. That's Thomas Varick Duane, one of the wellest-known bachelors in New York. He was crazy about Lelia."

"Not Bayard's Lelia!"

"Yes. That's really why Bayard got married so quick. He was afraid Tom Duane would steal her. Nice enough fellow, but too much money!"

Daphne looked at the big man, and caught him looking at her with a favorable appraisal. She stared him down with a cold self-possession of the American girl who will neither flirt nor flinch. Duane yielded and turned his eyes to Clay, recognized him, and nodded.

"Hello, old fellow! Huh ya?"

"Fine and dandy, thanks," said Clay.

Duane showed a willingness to come over and be presented, but Clay kept him off with a look like a pair of pushing hands.

Duane loitered about, waiting for his guests. He looked lonely. Daphne felt a mixture of charity and snobbery in her heart. She whispered to Clay:

"Invite the poor fellow over here till his guests come. I'm dying to be introduced to the person at home that I met the great Duane."

Again Clay shook his head.

"And that you introduced him to me."

Clay nodded. He beckoned Duane over with hardly more than a motion of the eyebrows. Duane came with a flattering eagerness. He put his hand out to Clay; and Clay, rising, made the presentation.

"You're not related to Bayard Kip I hope," Duane said, with an unlucky frown.

"He's my brother. Why?"

"I owe him a big grudge," said Duane. "He's stolen his wife from me, just as I was falling madly in love with her. Beautiful girl, your new sister."

"I've never seen her," said Daphne. "Beautiful girl!" he sighed. "Much too good for your brother, infinitely beyond me. Why don't you both move over to my table? Miss Kemble is to be there with her manager. Mighty clever girl—Miss Kemble. Have you seen her new play?"

"We were there tonight," said Daphne. "She's glorious!"

"Come on over and play in our yard, then."

Daphne had never met a famous actress. She was wild to join the group and to know Tom Duane better. But Clay spoke with an icy finality.

"Thanks, old man. We've already ordered." He still stood, and he had not invited Duane to sit down.

Tom Duane looked at Daphne and smiled like a boy rebuked. "All right, I'll go quietly. I know when I'm kicked out. But next time I won't go so easily. Good night."

He put his warm, friendly hand out again to Daphne and to Clay, who nodded him away with an appalling informality, considering how great he was.

Other people came in, some of them plainly sightseers, some of them personages of quality. Everybody seemed happy, clandestine, romantic. This was life as Daphne wanted to live it. But at length she yawned. Her little hand could not conceal the contortion of her features.

"I'm gloriously tired, honey," she confessed, with a lovable intimacy. "It's the most beautiful supper I ever had, but I'm sleepy."

He smiled with indulgent tenderness and said to the waiter, "Check!"

Daphne turned her eyes away decently at the slip of paper on a plate was set at Clay's elbow. But she noted that he started violently as he turned the bill over and met it face to face. He studied it with the grim heroism of one reading a death-warrant. The amount staggered him. He turned pale. He recovered enough to say to the waiter, "You've given me the wrong check."

The waiter shook his head. "Oh, nossair!"

Clay studied it again. He called for the bill of fare, and studied that. Daphne felt so ashamed that she wanted to leap into the river. Abroad, it is believed that the man who does not audit his restaurant bill is either an American tourist or some other kind of fool. But in Daphne's set it was considered the act of a miser. Clay worked over his check as if it were a trial balance.

"Ah, I thought so," he growled. "The bill of fare says that this Montreal melon is seventy-five cents a portion. You've charged me three dollars for two portions."

A look of pitying contempt twisted the waiter's smile.

"The melon you ordered, sair, was all out. I served you a French melon instead."

"Why didn't you tell me?"

"I deed not theenk it mettered to the gentleman."

Clay sniffed. He was not to be quieted by such a sop. He whipped out his pocketbook and laid down every bill in it. He stretched his legs and ransacked his trousers pockets and dropped on the plate every coin he had. He withdrew a dime and waved the heap at the waiter.

It was evident, from the way the waiter snatched the plate from the table, that Clay had not tipped him. In fact, Clay said, "This will be a lesson to you."

They slumped down the steps. The starter said, "Cab, sir?" and made to whistle one up. Clay shook his head and walked on toward the monument of Grant. Daphne followed. They went as humbly as a couple of paupers evicted for the rent.

Daphne was afraid to speak. She saw that Clay was sick with wrath, and she did not know him well enough to be sure how he would take her interference in his thoughts. She trudged along in utter shame.

The worst of her shame was that she was so ashamed of it. Why should she care whether a waiter smiled or frowned? But she did care, infinitely.

Daphne could not jump up any enthusiasm for the scenery. Her lover took no advantage of the aerial of arbors and the embracing bowers. He never kissed her, not once.

Daphne ceased to be sorry for Clay and felt sorry for her neglected self. Then she grew angry at herself. Then at him.

At length she said, with ominous sweetness, "Are you going to walk all the way, dear?"

"You said you wanted to, didn't you?" he mumbled, thickly.

"That's so."

She trudged some distance farther—a few blocks it was; it seemed miles. Then she said, "How far is it home—altogether?"

"About three miles and a half."

"Is that all? The heroine of an English novel I've been reading used to dash off five or six miles before breakfast."

Patriotism and pride helped her for a quarter of a mile more. Then she resigned:

"I guess I'm not an English heroine. I don't believe she ever really did it. I'll resign! I'll have to ask you to call me a cab."

"Pretty hard to find an empty one along here at this hour," he said, and urged her on.

"Let's go over that way to the inhabited part of town," she said, "and take a street car or the subway."

And then he stopped and said, with guilty brusquerie, "Have you got your pocketbook with you?"

"No, I left it at home tonight. Why?"

"Daphne, I haven't got a cent!"

"Why, Clay! you poor thing!"

"That's why I was so rough with the waiter. If I'd had the money, do you think I'd have made a row before you about a few little dollars? Never! You see, I didn't expect to go out to Claremont after the theater. The taxi cost more than I expected, and then I gave the head waiter five dollars instead of one. I overdrew my check so that it would come out right. But that business about the melon finished me. I just made it. I never was so ashamed in my life. And I had to drag you into it, and now I'm murdering your poor little feet."

"That's the funniest joke I ever heard. Why didn't you tell me before?"

"It's no joke."

"Why, of course it is! You have only to go to your bank tomorrow and draw some more."

He did not answer this. He said nothing at all. She had a terrified feeling that his silence was full of meaning, that his bank account would not respond to his call. She could not ask him to explain the situation. She was afraid that he might.

She marched on doggedly, growing more and more gloomy and decrepit. Her little slippers with their stilted heels pinched and wavered, and every step was a pang.

"Let's go over there and get on a street car, and dare them to put us off," she suggested.

"It's a pay-as-you-enter car," he groaned.

The world was a different world now. The drive that had been so tremendously lovely as she sped through it in a taxicab was a pathway in Mojave. She limped through the hideous, hateful, unpardonable length, and felt that it was a symbol of the life ahead of her. She had counted on escaping from the money limits of her home. She was merely transferring herself from one jail to another.

Her young lover had dazzled her with his heedless courtship, flown away with her on motor wings, dipping to earth now and then to sip refreshments at a high cost, and then swooping off with her again.

And now his wings had broken; his gasoline was gone; his motor burst out; and the rest of the journey was to be the same old trudge.

She had been leaning heavily on Clay's arm. Now she put it away from her in a mixture of pity for him and of self-reproof. When he protested, she said:

"I think I'll walk better alone for a while."

So she hobbled and hobbled by herself, he pleading to be allowed to help her. But she kept him away.

And they crept on a little farther, loving each other piteously.

In the course of time they reached the Soldiers' and Sailors' monument, and Daphne sank down at the base of it.

"I can't go any farther," she said, "not if I die of starvation." He sank down at her side. The moon peered at them between the columns and the cells of the monument, and seemed to tilt its face to one side and smile. A motorcar went by with the silence of a spring panther. Another car passing lit three a calcium light on Tom Duane and his guests and his chauffeur. How gorgeously they sped! If

Daphne had had a bit of luck she would be with them, soaring on the pinions of money, instead of hobbling on without it.

Daphne took off her slippers and fondled her poor abused feet as if they were her children. But when she tried to thrust them back into her slippers the final desperate effort she almost shrieked with the hurt.

"I'll have to go the rest of the way in my stocking feet," she moaned.

"Not if I have to carry you," Clay growled.

Before he had a chance to carry out his resolution a taxicab that had deposited its fares at an apartment house above went bowling by with its flag up.

Clay ran out and bowled at it till it stopped, circled round, and drew up by the bridle-path. Then he ran to Daphne and bundled her into it, and gave her address to the driver.

"But how are you going to pay him?" she sighed, blissfully, as they shot along. "Not that I care at all."

"I haven't figured that out," said Clay. "I'll drop you at home and then take him to my club and see if I can't borrow from somebody there. If I can't, I'll give him my watch or the fight of his life."

"That's terrible!" Daphne sighed. "To think how much I have cost you!"

"Well, I wanted to give you a good time on your little visit," said Clay, "and it's only two days till my next salary day."

THE ONION CROP.

How to Handle and Harvest It at the Proper Time.

As the onion is such a valuable crop, and as mistakes are often made in lifting it from the ground at too early a stage, a few words as to the proper times and methods of harvesting may be the means of saving many bushels of the bulbs. Upon the manner in which onions are ripened and harvested will depend their keeping qualities. The grower should allow the crop to make all the growth possible. The stems should not be bent at the neck, as is sometimes done, as long as they are erect and vigorous. Generally they will fall of their own accord. In some localities the idea is prevalent that bending down the stems favors the development of the bulbs. This is not true when the plants are growing vigorously, rather it prevents development, for upon the amount of elaborated food sent down from the leaves to the bulbs will depend the ultimate size of the latter. The raw food materials are absorbed by the root hairs in solution and sent upward to the leaves. Carbon dioxide is absorbed by the leaves, and in the green cells the whole food is elaborated and is sent to all of the growing parts of the plants. The grower should remember that neither onions or other plants feed directly from the soil. The roots simply absorb some of the elements which are latter converted into food.

When the stems of onions are immaturely bent or broken down the food supply is shut off. The bulbs do not fill out and become hard as they do when properly ripened, and consequently will not keep very long in winter storage. The tighter and firmer the bulbs may be the better chance of success in this respect.

Onions which were planted as Dutch sets during April or May without doubt large areas were planted, will now be showing signs of ripening. Water should not be given to crops which are assuming a yellow appearance of the leaf, nor should any fertilizing substance be applied. When onions of the kind approach the ripening stage, water should be withheld, otherwise a secondary root growth may start; and the bulbs be rendered tasteless. It is, of course, too early for the onions which were sown in drills to ripen. The forenoon dew remarks, however, should be borne in mind when these approach the ripening stage.

When harvesting onions it is best to lift them with a digging fork, but not until the tops have become brown and dry. They should then be spread out to dry for a few days, and be turned at intervals to favor equal drying on all sides. Generally onions will dry properly out of doors. If, however, rain is imminent it will be better to dry them on the floor or shelves of a dry and airy shed. Many varieties of onions will be ready for harvesting by mid-August, or shortly after.

Shorthorns.

Show-ring competition of the past few years in Canada has served to emphasize the growing popularity of Canadian-bred horses and cattle, particularly the Clyde saddle and Shorthorn breeds. Not only have certain splendid individual animals been adjudged superior to the best imported stock shown against them, but—what is more important—definite recognition has been given by eminent judges to a distinct "Canadian type" of animal. These last-bank achievements of Canadian stock are being duplicated at present in the sale-ring, in both Eastern and Western Canada. At the recent great Dryden-Miller sale of imported and Canadian-bred animals, a native female topped the lists, selling for $5,200, as reported at the time of the sale. More recently, in Manitoba, a Canadian-bred Aberdeen-Angus, Blackbird Eleanor-nock V., sold for the sum of $3,000. These two sales run in value into what is termed "big money," and transactions such as these put the Canadian stock-market, in so far as native pure-breds are concerned, in a class with those of the British Isles. It is pleasing to see animals from Canadian stables winning rosettes in the judging ring; it is even more gratifying to see them appeal as strongly as imported stuff to the fancy of discriminating buyers.

FARM BUTTER AT FAIRS

Hints for Farmers' Wives With Dairy Exhibits.

Flavor In Butter of First Importance — Firmness Also a Strong Point—How to Cure and Pack In Best Condition for Showing.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

"TO show or not to show," that is the question many a woman thinks over as the time draws near for the holding of the annual fall fair.

There are some who would not miss the event, and make entries in many classes; while others are rather timid about exhibiting, especially if they are doing it for the first time.

Let us take the exhibiting of butter. Sometimes a woman goes home from the fair feeling rather hurt because some neighbor took more and higher prizes than she did. She thought that her butter was good, but the other must have been considered better by the one who was acting as judge.

There are times when a judge has to mark very closely to place the prizes.

Score cards are not used at all of our fairs, nor do all judges use the same score card, but the one proposed by the National Dairy Council reads as follows, as regards points awarded:

Flavor	45
Texture	15
Incorporation of moisture	10
Color	10
Salting	10
Packing	10
Total	100

The flavor of the butter is a very important point to consider. It should be clean and sweet without taint of any kind.

An objectionable flavor, no matter how slight, would prevent one receiving a full score. Some defects in flavor are more serious than others, but many of these could be avoided by taking a little more care.

The cans in the stable and in the separator room is just as important as the churning or the holding of the butter afterwards.

If a judge should find two lots of butter with the same total score he would give the higher place to the lot with the better flavor.

The texture of the butter is another point that is taken into consideration. Butter should have good body—firm and waxy.

You have cut butter that looked good and remained firm on the plate, but you have also seen that the opposite to this—butter that had a greasy appearance, the drops of moisture large and milky, and it became soft when left in the plate for a short time.

The judge comes across just as great contrasts when going through the exhibits and he scores accordingly.

To secure good texture it is necessary to make use of suitable temperatures and to work the butter in the right way. Cool the cream immediately after separating and churn it at a temperature that will bring the butter in nice firm granules in 20 to 30 minutes. (Too high temperature means soft butter and greater loss in the buttermilk).

The temperature of the wash water should be such that it will not make the butter too hard or too soft for working. Work the butter by pressing it carefully and evenly. A sliding or cutting motion will tend to make the butter greasy. Overworking should also be avoided. Butter is worked to make it compact and to distribute the salt and moisture evenly. When butter is cut the surface should be close and the drops of moisture should be clear and very minute.

The color of the butter should be even and bright. If the butter is not worked enough the color will be uneven, although this is not noticeable at the time of working.

If the butter is too soft, the salt should be mixed evenly in, and the butter placed where it will come to a proper firmness [illegible] doing this it will score higher for both texture and color than it would if worked in the soft state. The salt in the butter should be evenly distributed and thoroughly dissolved. It is better to have the butter salted very lightly than to have it oversalted. The popular butter at the present time has only mild clean flavor, close body and light salting.

The finish or packing should also be considered. In fact, the judge will notice the appearance of the roll before he has had time to draw out a plug of butter on his trier. Let the prints be well made—solid, even, with clear-cut corners and the papers wrapped neatly.

Butter tubs and boxes require a lining of parchment paper, and crocks should be in good condition, free from cracks or defects in the glazing. The top of a large package should be smoothly finished and covered neatly with parchment paper.

Butter for exhibition should be made two days or more before the fair to give it time to come on, and should be kept in a clean cool place on the farm, and be brought to the fair in the best possible condition. Butter made and cared for in this way will score higher than it would if made the morning of the fair, as is sometimes the case.

Do not feel discouraged if you do not secure the prizes that you hoped to win. Try again, remembering the little rhyme which says,

"Good, better, best, never let it rest.
Till your good is better, and your better, best."

Sharpen Scissors,

By accident one day a certain housewife discovered that cutting sandpaper sharpened her scissors. Now she does not have to wait for the scissors grinder to come around, for she always keeps a sheet of sandpaper in her machine drawer to sharpen her scissors with.

The Flying Dress.

A short back shoulder cape and a similar shaping to the overskirt tunic gives the effect of wings to a frock of crepe and satin that is fittingly described as the flying dress.

A Witness Testifies

SHE WAS WEAK AND NERVOUS

Brampton, Ont.:—"About five years ago I began suffering with women's troubles, became all run-down weak and nervous. I was so completely worn down and out that I could not do any thing, could scarcely dress myself. I had the doctor and took other medicine but without getting better until I began taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and his Golden Medical Discovery. It was only necessary for me to take about three bottles when I was completely restored to health and strength and I have been in better health than I ever was before. I have had no use for medicine since, but should I need it I would take these same remedies, knowing they will be excellent."—MRS. HARRY KNIGHT, Jessie St.

OWES HER LIFE

Ft. Saskatchewan, Alta.:—"It is with great pleasure that I write the following and I hope it will help the many sufferers who do not know of the good Dr. Pierce's medicines would do them if they would try them.

"In regard to my condition, I will say that I suffered from childhood from a very weak back; I had the misfortune of having spinal meningitis when I was one year old and until I was 13 I did not walk well day, but a very kind lady told my mother about Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and she got a bottle to try it. It did me so much good that mother got me a bottle. Recently I happened with a car accident and hurt my back badly. My doctor gave me up and said I would not live, but I still stick to Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and to my surprise in three weeks I was out of bed and better. I owe my life to it and nothing else, and shall never be without it.

"If any sufferer wishes to write I will answer with pleasure."—MRS. NOEL BARTELOMEW.

VALUE OF FALL FAIRS

HAVE DONE GOOD WORK IN CANADA.

Crop Growers and Stock Breeders Pick Up Hints From Exhibits and the Show Ring. Brings Stock to the Notice of Possible Buyers—No Better Advertising Medium Exists.

Probably the institution that deserves most credit for the improvement in our cattle and live stock within the past fifty years is the agricultural exhibition, including all shows from the C.N.E. to the smallest Fall Fair. Farmers, as a rule, admit the value of the Fall Fair as an incentive to better agricultural practice, and recognize its importance to the commercial avancement of the country as a whole, but those men are likely to be in the habit of by townspeople, who fail to see benefit to any but the prize-winners in donations of trophies or hard cash to owners of superior crop samples or specimens of cattle, sheep or other live stock breeds that are of superior excellence.

Agricultural shows, small and great, are credited with having brought about a decided advance in the British live stock industry to its leading position, and there is no questioning the fact that the fame of British breeds of live stock has done much in aading to the wealth of the country. The shows, several of them now known as world exhibitions, are encouraging the breeders to increased effort at improvement of their stock, have done more than anything else to advertise the high quality of the horses, cattle, sheep and swine produced in he British Isles. In fact, so closely is the show related to the prosperity of the live stock raising in Britain that it is most usual for shows to be followed directly by sales, at which the prize-winning stock is, in many cases, sold to foreign buyers.

In Canada, fault is sometimes found with the fact that the big breeders, outside those who operate on a large scale, or showmen who acquire animals merely for show purposes, are able to do so at the expense of taking their stock to the big exhibitions. This is regretable, to some extent, but it must be allowed that the breeder who has stock fit to win at such shows will not be long in making money to stand the expenses of the show circuit. In any business, a man must crawl before he can walk, and for those who cannot tackle the big shows there is always the chance to buy good animals before the public at the lesser fairs. Moreover, one of the chief benefits of the big shows is the example in the way of high-class animals, that they bring before stockmen who have not yet advanced any great way in breeding high-class animals on their own farms. The expression "the educational side of our agricultural exhibitions" is about worn threadbare, but it must be allowed that the display of live stock made annually at such shows as Toronto, London, Ottawa, Brandion, Calgary and Edmonton are a splendid education for live stock breeders, who are not so far advanced in the art as are the exhibitors.

Not only is the live stock section of our agricultural shows provide displays that go to encourage improved production, principles of high quality from crops, as found especially in the displays of sheaf grain, roots, vegetables and fruits, are often the first intimation received by the farmers, of what can be done in the way of crop production by the more experienced farmers. Other sections of the show, such as those reserved for machinery, barn equipment, etc., bring hints of labor-saving possibilities to the farmer show visitor, who are likely to result in greatly increased production if taken and followed on the home farm.

Accounts of broken attendance records at this season's fairs in Western Canada are an indication of the importance attached to the fall fair by all classes of the population, and it is to be hoped that the exhibition season in the East, where other industries than agriculture play a more important part than in the Western provinces, may see the townsmen showing their recognition of the importance of food production to the well-being of the whole population, by subscribing freely to the Fall Fair prize lists and attending both the local and central.

AVOID THE SCRUB BULL

IT WILL RUIN QUALITY OF ANY HERD.

Farmers In Several Ontario Counties Relate Their Experiences and Give Ample Proof to Convince the Most Skeptical—Feeders Learn Lesson by Loss in Value of Inferior Steers.

The most convincing argument in favor of the purebred sire breed of the grade and scrub are the actual reports which have been obtained from the use of both types.

The following are actual experiences of farmers on their own farms:

A farmer in Dufferin County, Ontario, had a calf dropped March 18, 1919, which he sold on December 12 of the same year at 23¼ cents per pound. This baby beef brought $169.20. This calf was out of a good grade cow which herself sired by a purebred bull. The calf was also sired by an approved type of purebred sire. In the same stable on similar feeding and treatment at the same time was [illegible] also out of a fairly good grade cow, but sired by a grade bull. This calf was dropped November 5, 1918, and was sold on the same day as the calf already referred to (December 12, 1919). He brought 19 cents per pound or 4½ cents less per pound than his stable mate by the purebred bull, and he brought $174.80. He was 4½ months older, had taken more feed and care, but did not have as good quality and so was not as profitable as his better bred stable mate. These calves were exceptionally well fed but breeding counted to the extent of 4½ cents per pound and enabled the feeder to market his best calf at very close to as much money in 4½ months shorter time. This is a case where the feeding was right in both cases and where the purebred bull was directly responsible for the difference.

The experience of a London Township farmer, Middlesex County, with purebred and scrub bulls shows very closely the place of the scrub sire. Six years ago he had in his herd eight bull calves from purebred sire. These were made steers and kept until two and one-half years old, finished on grass and when sold averaged $140 each. The next year the farmer was ailing and was unable to take the cows at distance to a purebred sire. A neighbor offered him the use of his scrub sire. The progeny from this mating from which five steers were kept, fed and marketed under the same conditions, brought $114 each, although there had been a slight increase in weight over the year. The farmer states that the five steers he lost $130 in one year, and to the average farmer using a scrub bull it [illegible] the loss would be $260 from a beef standpoint alone. If the daughters of the scrub bull were kept in the herd this loss would show in their calves in succeeding years. This man claims that as soon as farmers keep an accurate profit and loss account the scrub bull will disappear.

A Peel County farmer's experience is as follows: "Though we had been using purebred bulls for many years previous to a time about nine years ago we yielded to temptation on a growthy looking, well-built grade Shorthorn for which we paid $35 at six months' old. (Why should he not produce as good stock as a registered calf costing $75, more or less?) When his first calves were about four or five months old they seemed a poor lot, but the bull was kept for another season in spite of our observations. When the steers were put in to feed when rising two years, as is our custom, the folly of our selection became glaringly apparent to the face every time we went to feed them. They wouldn't respond to good feeding and attention. There was little pleasure in trying to fatten them and they went to market with few exceptions an inferior bunch. We had learned our lesson and sometimes think it was fortunate that we did keep the bull long enough to be really impressed forever by the experience and loss of a big bunch of grades.

"Our next bull was of Gainford Marquis blood costing $100 at six months. Our first crop of calves headed our grade herds. Fine growthy fellows, they accounted for any feed given, were a source of pleasure to the eye and brought the best price when sent to market. Counting the difference in delight, adding the extra value per pound and making allowance for feed consumed, there was a difference of from $20 to $25 per steer in favor of the good bull. A worse case was that of the heifers from this same bull. They had to be sold for beef. Instead of being able to select good heifers we had lost two years by using the scrub. Though it cannot be computed in dollars and cents, the satisfaction in feeding and caring for good animals is really worth more than all other features combined."

Can you afford to use a grade or scrub bull?

Must Observe Cleanliness.

Just one time of neglecting to cleanse the tubes of the milking machine may cost the milk of the entire dairy for that day, and more, if one remains there unnoticed to continue. No man ever ought to get a milking machine, unless he is determined to keep the pails, teat cups and tubes absolutely clean.

"Parasol Skirt."

Scarlet taffeta with a tight undertunic reaching merely to the calf, and a flaring parasol-like overskirt that comes to the knee and is made sure of itself with crinoline, topped off by a crushed bodice of scarlet gauze and all of it banded and striped by purple and orchid embroideries makes a wonderfully fetching dance frock. One of the few black fans seen has carried with this costume when it was shown recently at Nice.

FABRICS TO FIT SUMMER TIME

Lace Will Be Prominent; Silks Are to Prevail for the Smartest Blouses.

BLACK FAVORED FOR DRESSES

Color is Brightened by Flowers and Fruits in Vivid Hues—Semi-Evening Dress Makes Appearance.

Already there is promise of a summer during which distinctly summery materials will be used in our clothes. In recent years observes a prominent fashion writer, it has appeared that dressmakers were determined to use velvet and cloth in the models that they made for mid-summer. This spring's fashions require quantities of laces, organdies and taffetas—materials associated with warm days.

Back of it all is the Spanish influence, which is accountable for the extensive use of laces and other lingerie materials as well as crisp silks.

The great demand for laces created by the new models has caused havoc in the lace manufacturing districts of France, unprepared as they were for this onslaught.

Lace is playing no small part in blouses. At the opening of the autumn season the use of handsome metal brocades, metal embroideries and beaded materials was apparent. With the advent of spring the elaborate blouse has grown lighter in weight and the lace trimmed and lace blouse takes precedence over all others.

Plain skirts of dark cloth are topped by lace blouses and the whole costume completed by a cape or loose coat of the cloth to carry out the three-piece idea which still holds a prominent place in fashions. These blouses extend over the hips in long-waisted effect and some are draped to curve slightly at the waistline.

Little Sashes and Short Sleeves.

Little sashes, which may be cut in one piece with the front or start from the underarm seams, are youthful appendages on these blouses, although it is a matter of personal taste as to whether one shall wear sashes or not. Sleeves are short, in almost every instance ending above the elbow. There are, however, a few long-sleeved blouses.

Among the most charming are those developed in black Chantilly lace. An excellent model, in which tucked organdie is combined with black Chantilly, shows the body of the blouse formed of the tucked organdie and the shoulder-cape collar, front panel and a low hanging girdle ending in a bow across the back made of the black lace. The girdle is wired to hold it in perfect shape. The black and white effect is accentuated through the introduction of a slender necktie and tiny line girdle of crisp green taffeta.

A blouse trimmed with hand-run Isabella lace is of a pale rose crepe georgette. The lace forms a berthe which surrounds the low, round neck. The sleeves, in bell shape, reach to the wrists and have double rows of lace insertion. Over the hips are little godet flares of the same sheer lace.

Blouses of Vivid Silks.

Silk printed in the most primitive designs and colors appears in many of the smartest blouses. Sometimes in making a handsome blouse these printed figures are given added color by being outlined in an embroidery stitch. One model is of a silk showing the adaptation of the flora of the Balkans, in peasant colors, printed on an ivory background.

The waist is finished with a weighted girdle made of strands of artificial silk drawn through slot-like button holes. Similar effects are used for banding spring hats and also for making headdresses. On very dressy costumes these girdles are sometimes made of the fronds of ostrich feathers knotted into long strings, with multiple strands massed to form the girdle.

Blouses often take the vest form with side lapping front. These have big buttons and buttonholes and either false or real pockets. A typical model has a woven pattern showing little dancing figures forming stripes or bands. All edges of the bolero are bound with satin cire ribbon. The round neck and the short sleeves are finished with double frills of knife-plaited linen.

Among the lace dresses black is the favorite color. These have tiers of flounces from waistlines to hem on either side of the skirt, the front and back remaining perfectly plain. No trimming is placed on the bodice.

Dinner Dress Having Tunic of Ivory Colored Tulle Hand Embroidered in Metal Threads Over a Plaited Underskirt of Chiffon. The Bodice of Coral Colored Taffeta Has No Fastening But Slips on Over Head.

There is usually, however, a bit of very bright color introduced into these black dresses through some trimming at the waistline. One has a cluster of green grapes hanging from the belt. Another has a wreath of scarlet flowers going over the shoulder and girdling the waist, while a third is sashed with wide black ribbon embroidered in red flowers.

Innumerable dancing frocks are in ecuille or blond tulle. Ecuille is an exquisite shade which is neither brown nor yellow, but exactly like some of the tones in a tortoise shell, from which it takes its name. It is also the color of certain shades of blond hair.

A wonderfully attractive model developed in blond tulle has thirteen tiny ruffles, each one bordered with a delicate gold embroidery. These ruffles pass in slightly undulating waves around the front and sides of the skirt, but the back is perfectly plain. The new feature in the waist is the panel in the back, which forms a perfect square, coming up like the lid of a box. It is held in place by slightly drawn shoulder straps of gold cord attached to the points of the square front. The waistline is drawn in quite snugly by means of a tiny gold cord.

Petal Skirts of Great Charm

A number of charming dancing dresses have the entire skirt made of petals of rose, dark brown or black, on self-tone tulle foundations. The result is a dress made of petals, but in no way looking like a flower dress. It gives more the effect of a ruffled skirt than anything else and is wonderfully attractive.

Similar effects are worked out in dresses of pink metal gauze. The bodices topping these petaled skirts are extremely plain, sometimes entirely devoid of trimming.

The fluffy appearance of such costumes is made even more pronounced by voluminous scarfs of tulle. These scarfs are also worn with the dress of petals or ruffles. They add to frequently the colors are in striking contrast to the dress. For instance, a scarf of brilliant blue may accompany a dress of rose color.

Semi-evening Dress Adopted.

Evening dresses are cut so low in the back and have become so very elaborate that women hesitate to don these except on very formal occasions and for this reason have adopted the semi-evening dresses. The elaborate models for evening wear are quite scandalously decollete, the bodices being nothing more than a garniture of embroidery and beads harmonizing with the skirt and shoulder straps.

Semi-evening dresses have great use in one's wardrobe, as they may be worn in the late afternoon as well as evening and are very suitable for dining in public places. Women feel more comfortable in such dresses when dining in public than they do in those that are extremely decolette.

Metal embroidered ecuille lace is used for evening costumes, either as a drapery or for entire skirts.

Tulle is Popular.

Much tulle is the order of the minute and this is beaded and embroidered in the most intricate fashion, even though the heaviness of the beadwork is applied to almost invisible fabric.

TO REVIVE SWISS

Dotted Fabric, Popular Years Ago, for Summer Wear.

New Material Will Be Different From That of Grandmother's Day; Wider Color Range.

The simple old times of our grandmothers are to be revived this summer in the use of the dotted swiss that fashioned the summer gown of 50 years ago.

Of course, the new dotted swiss will be very different from the simple white material of other days, as the dotted material of this year is infinite in its color range. However, there will be considerable plain white swiss, as well as the more fanciful materials in this designation.

Organdie will also be a prime favorite, and a very lovely new organdie gown recently featured a combination of this material with a heavy torchon lace that was applied in a deep band to the skirt.

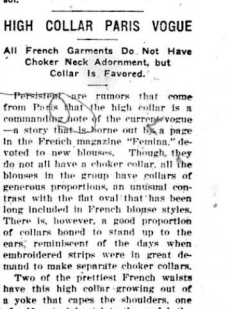
In the dotted swisses one of the most striking models was shown recently in a cherry-colored dotted swiss cut on very simple lines and decorated with a deep sash of self-material. This costume was completed by a hat of dotted swiss with a drooping brim laden with cherries.

A quaint and charming gown of shell-pink dotted swiss seen recently showed a skirt with a plain front and back panel and three side tunics made of ruffles of the dotted swiss set together with the organdie insertion. The bodice was cut on bolero lines and showed a vest of tucked white organdie and white organdie beading outlining the edge of the bolero. Two tiny plaited ruffles of the organdie completed the round neck and short sleeves, while a tiny bow of black velvet ribbon nestled at the throat, with long ends that dropped to the waist line.

Another charming summer frock done in the admired dotted swiss and white voile is being shown in dawn blue. The skirt is formed of three deep scalloped flounces of the dotted swiss, bound with white organdie, that are set on a yoke of the white voile.

The voile forms the bloused bodice that has a row of pin tucking down the front elaborated with white crocheted buttons. The round neck and short sleeves are decorated with plain bands of the blue dotted swiss.

CHARMING PARASOL IN SILK



This parasol is fashioned in white silk and marked in gay contrast by clusters of roses. The ivory handle adds much to the beauty of the parasol.

HIGH COLLAR PARIS VOGUE

All French Garments Do Not Have Choker Neck Adornment, but Collar Is Favored.

Persistent are rumors that come from Paris that the high collar is a commanding note of the current vogue in story the Les Modes tells us, in a page in the French magazine "Feminine" devoted to new blouses. Though, they do not all have a choker collar, all the blouses in the group have collars of generous proportions, an unusual contrast with the flat collar that has been long included in French blouse styles. There is, however, a good proportion of collars boned to stand up to the ears, reminiscent of the days when embroidered strips were in great demand to make separate choker collars.

Two of the prettiest French waists have this high collar growing out of a yoke that capes the shoulders, one of self-material and the other of lace, the other of lingerie against a silk blouse, the yoke falling over softly in bertha fashion. Both collars flare out under the ears, one with a bow of ribbon set high to accentuate the ruffle finish.

Difficult Churning Causes.

Difficult churning may be due to several factors:

Wrong churning temperature of the cream. Sixty degrees is about right.

In a few instances it may be due to the action of certain germs.

In some instances it may be due to feeding foods which produce a large percentage of hard fats.

Sour cream churns easier than sweet cream.

Ottawa, Aug. 31—Whether Indians have constitutional rights under treaty in regard to fishing and therefore are not bound to comply with legislation requiring fishermen to take out a license is the point of contention in the case now being argued before Justice Riddell here. The plaintiff, Eliza Sorrow, an Indian woman from the Mohawk reserve, on the Bay of Quinte, was fishing in those waters with nets in 1919, and as she did not have a license she was stopped and her nets confiscated. She was deprived of her means of earning a living. She sues Inspectors Fleming and Galt for $680 damages. The case was heard by the late Chief Justice Falconbridge, who died just before he had delivered judgment. Justice Riddell is hearing the re-argument of the case.
